Mystery Objects In New York City's Sky

The Federal Aviation Administration said it received many calls to its operations center. After reviewing radar data, the agency could not find anything out of the ordinary.

SpokesmanJim Peters said that they re-ran radar to see if there was anything there that they can't account for but there is nothing in the area (Chelsea). There was some helicopter traffic over the river at that time and they checked with LaGuardia Tower. And they said they had nothing going low at that time. Peters said if it was a weather balloon or any kind of organized balloon release, authorities should have been notified in advance. Police officials said they had received no notification...

Bentley Motors News: Bentley Replacing Ornament

Bentley Motors' European head office in Berlin said Thursday the recall affects 620 cars in the US, Canada and 200 in Europe who added the raised hood ornament as an option on Arnage, Brooklands and Azure models made between October 2006 and March 2009.
The company says no injuries have been reported but a Bentley dealer noticed the spring mechanism under the ornament has a tendency to corrode and might not always function properly.
The fear is that if the hood ornament does not retract, it could increase the risk of injury to a pedestrian in the event of a crash.
Bentley, owned by Germany's Volkswagen AG, will replace the mechanism free and says the work takes about an hour to complete.

Hulk Hogan

Hulk Hogan has been hospitalized with back pain. The 57-year-old wrestling legend (aka Terry Bollea) was taken Monday to the Morton Plant Hospital in Clearwater in Florida. Recently he appeared on Comedy Central's Roast of David Hassellhoff and starred on the reality series Hogan Knows Best. He said to his fans in the emergency room Monday that his back went into a major spasm from hip all the way to the middle of his back — it just totally overwhelmed him. Tuesday, Hogan said he was feeling better and had several tests scheduled for the day...
